What is responsibility? There can be many definitions of that word. Looking out for your little brother or getting your homework done can be a liability of yours. Everybody possesses responsibilities, and mine presumptively aren't much different than any other older brother.

Being an older brother isn't that great. In my family I'm accountable for everything, if my sister doesn't do the dishes I get in trouble with my parents. My Uncle , tells me everytime he sees me to straighten out the kids. All I can say to him is it's not as easy as it sounds. Since I started to get blamed for every little thing that they didn't do I became furious. I would become a big menace to my siblings.

Everyday I found myself teasing my brother and my sisters, but I didn't happen to be the only one being a bully. ~~Every~~ Everybody in the house started teasing everybody else. All of us kids never got along. To everybody else it most likely looked like a big family fued, but to us it was more than that.

One day I came home from school did my chores and every thing I normally did, then I rushed into my room and began reading a book. Shortly after I heard a couple taps on my door and my mom walked in and said my brother just came home after spending the whole day in the principals office. He had been stepping on peoples shoes and pushing children down. He said it happened because I'm always bullying him. At first I didn't want to believe it but shortly I came to reality that it had been my fault. Soon after that talk I pulled my brother to the side and I told him

If he does that he will never have any good friends and he will end up being a big, rude, obnoxious person when he gets older. Because of that day I have been easing up on my little brother and sisters and slowly but surely we will end up to be one big happy family.

I have quite a few responsibilities but just because I can't handle them every so often doesn't give me the right to act mean and treat my siblings with disrespect. After that day I have attened and will keep attening. Someday we will all be happy and get along. Then we can be a big happy loving family.
